

Bengaluru teens use art to raise funds for causes

Sara Borasio 18 July 2017

Ashwini and Priya were passionate about singing and acting, but they, like other young people they knew, had few spaces to perform. Together they founded Jazba, a local, youth-run "India's Got Talent" to give young people a space to perform where all proceeds go to a hand-picked local social change organization. In a world that is changing rapidly, accelerating social problems need accelerated solutions. Ashwini and Priya demonstrate that young people have the power today to #LeadYoung and steer that change for the good of all. Read their story below:
